Zohran Mamdani Addresses City in First Speech as Mayor

This “block party” was a bust.

Scores of Zohran Mamdani fans who braved freezing temperatures to celebrate the new mayor as he was publicly sworn into office Thursday were left disappointed by the bash the socialist pol had promised.

Around 10,000 supporters stood outside City Hall during the event — billed as an “Inauguration for a New Era Block Party” by Mamdani’s staff — crammed into several barricaded pens without access to bathrooms or any food concession stands.

“It’s definitely not a block party,” said Danny Mahabir, 30, an Astoria resident who told The Post he’d been expecting a mix of food and music at the New Year’s Day festivities.

Instead, Mahabir, who wore three layers of clothes to stay warm, said he and others are “just stuck behind the barricades watching it on TV.”

Revelers observed speakers including US Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and US Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) on a series of big TV screens set up along Broadway, as 4,000 invited guests sat more comfortably in City Hall’s outdoor plaza to witness Mamdani take the oath of office.

While Mamdani fans were still excited for the new administration to get underway, they weren’t impressed by the supposed “block party” on a frigid day when temperatures dropped to the mid-20s.

“It’s not exactly what I was expecting,” said Brooklyn resident Shane Turner, 30. “I was expecting food and music.”

“I could’ve watched this from home,” added a 25-year-old Queens woman, who declined to give her name.

A large crowd of people, many wearing winter gear and NYC 2019 pins, gathered for the inauguration ceremony.

Attendees were asked to arrive by 11 a.m. ahead of the 1 p.m. ceremony, which started over 30 minutes late.

Mamdani's camp billed the event as a public block party along the historic Canyon of Heroes that would have designated viewing areas for "tens of thousands to gather and participate in the ceremony, ensuring the day belongs to all New Yorkers."

But his team also warned on their website there would not be portable restrooms "due to safety concerns" and "no food for sale within the block party."

While Mamdani officials advised attendees there were nearby markets and eateries for grub, attendees needed to leave the barricaded pens and go through security again to re-enter.

Two Mamdani volunteers at one point raced to the bathroom at a nearby Pret a Manger while other spectators even took refuge in nearby stores to stay warm while he was talking.

Still, most people who showed up remained passionate believers in the new socialist mayor.

"I'm not disappointed," said Turner, the Mamdani devotee from Brooklyn. "I came here to witness history. The past four years felt like hell under the previous mayor."

Having spent much time behind the old 'Iron Curtain,' I wasn't surprised by any of this. This is hard-left style implementation -- 100 things always 'fall between the cracks' (sometimes big, obvious things like bathrooms).

IT HAS BEGUN: NYC just passed the COPA law, and it's chilling. The city now gives government approved nonprofits first dibs when property owners try to sell, kneecapping private buyers and stripping owners of real control over their own property.

This is the government inserting itself into who can ...

He attempted to pull-off a flashy speech. He will do television appearances, he'll make slick social media posts about how he's stopping Trump, and he'll do his part to ensure that the Democratic Party's socialist faction emerges triumphant in 2028.
